

RUTGERS ENTREPRENEURIAL SOCIETY

July 27, 2010

To Whom It May Concern:

As an aspiring student entrepreneur and founder of the University's first "Entrepreneurial Society" it is my pleasure to express gratitude to the members and directors of CIVET for their support of entrepreneurial ambitions of students at Rutgers University. Amongst other things CIVET provides the Undergraduate community with exceptional opportunities to learn from accomplished technology entrepreneurs, who in turn serve as role-models and even mentors to aspiring students.

Furthermore, CIVET played a critical role during the start-up and growth phases of the Rutgers Entrepreneurial Society, a student organization that supports enterprising students at the Undergraduate level. The assistance and guidance of CIVET, led by Susan Engelhardt, has opened many doors for our organization and allowed us to continue providing resources and unequalled opportunities for Rutgers students.

CIVET's commitment to excellence and drive for innovation provides the spark necessary to transition from concept to reality. The organization's forward thinking philosophy and open-minded leadership makes students very comfortable and enables them to succeed in their ventures as well as their academic careers.

As one of the students whose academic pursuits and business ambitions were positively affected by CIVET, I urge other students to become involved and further encourage the support for this remarkable organization.

Keep Up the Good Work!
